

What is a CSA?

Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) is a subscription-style farming partnership between CSA members (you!) and the farmer.

Members sign up early in the season for weekly CSA shares that last during the peak growing season. In return for this early commitment, CSA members receive the freshest food possible, learn about new vegetables, explore recipes that you may not have tried before. In return, the farmers spend more time producing the best crops possible.

This allows us to have more money at the beginning of the season to cover start-up costs like vegetable seeds.

Price and Benefits

A part of the concept of CSA membership is to support the farm financially at the beginning of the season (where most of our expenses occur). We understand that budgeting a full summer's worth of produce costs into one payment can be a challenge, so we offer a payment plan with 2 installments. A down payment is due to reserve a CSA membership, with the balance due/final payment by March 1, 2024. Shares not paid in full by March 1, 2024 will be made available to members on the waiting list, and your balance will be returned less a $20 administrative fee.

Our Growing Methods

We are minimalists, which means we like to use the least amount of chemicals to grow our crops. However, we do use fertilizer to yield a large enough quantity of produce. If there is a problem with pests, we use the bare minimum amount of FDA-approved chemicals necessary to allow us to harvest our crops. We utilize organic methods as often as possible.

Is there any risk?

CSA members provide support to the farm, while the farm works hard to provide a plentiful, consistent, and varied supply of farm fresh produce. We have more than 30 years in agriculture production, and many more years in farm stand and market experience. That being said, there is a small element of risk in a CSA membership: due to weather or other events beyond our control, there may be complications with some crops, and the forecasted share supply may have to be changed on short notice. We may bring in fresh, local produce from our partner farms to supplement for impacted crops.
